SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

By Mail, - - - - - $10.00 per Year.

Office: No. 7 Pearl Street, Near Broadway.

MINOR MENTIONS.

-J. Mueller's Palace Music Hall.

-Subscribe for newspapers and periodicals at H. E. Seaman's book store.

-A twenty-minute prayer meeting is being held each noon this week at the Y. M. C. A.

-There is a death in the matrimonial market, no license having been issued in this county for four days past.

-There will be a meeting of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, over the post-office, this evening. A full attendance is requested. All visiting brothers are cordially invited.

-A suit was yesterday commenced here against the Western Union Telegraph company by J. S. Beatty, claimant $2,000 damages for failure to send a telegram with due diligence.

-Fred Dietrich and Mary Ellen McKinley, both of Burlington, in this state, were last Thursday married in this city by Rev. Peter Belzer, at the residence of the officiating clergyman.

-As a curious sample of mixed bill posting, there appears on Broadway an announcement of Paddy Ryan's, so posted over the noon day prayer meeting as to make it appear that Paddy was to give his entertainment before the Y. M. C. A.

-An attempt is being made to secure release of the man Strauss on a writ of habeas corpus. It will be remembered that he was brought here from Kansas City on a charge of adultery with Mrs. Johnson. The case is to be looked into by Judge Aylesworth today.

-A farmer's team took a run from in front of Kiehl's hotel yesterday forenoon just as the owner was about to climb into wagon. The horses ran to Broadway and almost dashed over a cutter standing in front of Metcalf Bros' store. There was little damage done beyond a broken neck yoke and slightly demoralized horses.

-There seems to be quite a rush of business with the justices. Vaughan takes his lunch at the office to keep from wasting the noon hour. Abbott has illuminated his hallway so that, in the rush of patrons at night, no one may fall in the darkness while Schurs keeps steadily at his desk from early dawn till late dusk.

-Sheriff Jones, of Crawford county, yesterday took back with him from here, the young man Vogt, who had recently come with difficulty with Dr. Billinger. It is now apparent that Vogt is insane, which may account for the insulting language he used toward the doctor, and for which the doctor ejected him from his office. It was with great difficulty that Vogt could be got upon the train, he showing such violence.

-The case of Nelson vs. Swobe was yesterday decided by Judge Aylesworth, who rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the value of the goods which were taken from the plaintiff's room at the defendant's hotel. The case was a close one, involving as it did the question of liability of landlords. The clothing which was taken from the room while Nelson had gone down to dinner, and the lock on the door was not in working order so he could not fasten it.

-The twelfth annual report of the Odd Fellows' fraternal association of Council Bluffs has just been printed and distributed. It shows that the membership during the year has fallen from 785 to 426, only twelve of that decrease being by death. Some changes have been made in the plan of insurance so as to remedy defects in the system and prevent such dissatisfaction as is evidenced by the decrease in membership. The association has paid in death losses now about $100,000 and has a surplus of $3,279 on hand.

-Yesterday afternoon a team belonging to Marshal Jackson had a lively run on Broadway. The team was hitched to a pump, in which was the Big Grove mill. The driver, Mr. Soles, was about putting a box from Seaman's into the pump, when the horses started down Broadway, he not being able to jump in and grab the reins. The horses were brought to a sudden standstill by colliding with a telegraph pole near Foster's store, one of the horses being knocked down and so badly hurt that death will probably ensue. The other broke loose and went further, but when stopped was found to be uninjured. The dash of the team started another runaway, it being a rig belonging to Mr. Orvis. The delivery wagon was overturned, but no special damage done.

-Crystal Roller Mills Patent Granulated Flour, Superlative A, the highest grade of flour manufactured. Snowy white, pure, light and sweet. Ask your grocer for it and you will have none other.

FICTION STRANGER THAN TRUTH.

How a Bank Burglary Grew Out of a Key-hole-Suit Another Resurrection Sensation Spoiled.

A sensational story was started and gained quite wide-spread circulation, that an attempt had been made to burglarize the Citizens' bank. The report was a little later reduced to the fact that an attempt had been made to secure an entrance into the unoccupied building which has lately been vacated by the Citizens' bank, it having been removed into its new headquarters in the Shugart block. Why burglars should care to enter the empty building could be accounted for only by the fact that the sign of the bank was still over the door, and the burglars did not know of the removal. A hole was shown in the door, in corroboration of the fact that the fellows had really been at work there. There were scores of citizens who viewed the remains, and even Clark, the eloquent scribe, was duped into believing that bank burglars were not sharp enough to know an empty building from an occupied one, and wrote up a glowing account of the attempted crime. The fact is that the hole in the door was made in fitting on a Yale lock a few inches above the old lock, and when the bank folk moved they took the lock off, exposing the hole, and thus leaving an unused key hole out of which the burglary sensation crept.

Still another sensation has served for a sweet morsel for the gossips to roll under their tongues. The report was spread up and down the street that a woman who was lately taken to the cemetery was found not to be dead, but in a trance, and that she was brought back to her home, and was resuscitated.

This story gained almost as wide a circulation here as the other, and the name, date and details were told so positively that many believed there was something to it, but it has less foundation even than the keyhole burglary, there seeming to be not even a single fact out of which any such story could be spun.

Another Close Call.

Denison seems to be presenting a good many practical warnings to the traveling public not to jump off or on moving trains. A few days ago Sheriff Jones had one of the narrowest escapes from death on record, the details of which have already been given in THE BEE. Now comes the report that W. A. Porter, an employee of the Northwestern road, had also a narrow escape from death by a like cause. In attempting to jump from a freight train, his mitten being damp and frosty, he slipped and fell, and he was dragged several rods, and then, colliding with a cattle guard, was thrown over upon the track in an insensible condition. He lay there for half an hour before regaining consciousness, and crawled off in time to escape the noon mail train.

His injuries consist of a black eye, several severe bruises and the loss of two teeth.

FROM ADAMS COUNTY.

A Peculiar Damage Case, Growing Out of the Death of a Child-some Suggestions About MILK.

Correspondence of THE BEE.

CORNING, January 16.-That the readers of THE BEE may understand the nature of the case, a brief statement of the situation of the parties, plaintiff and defendant, might be necessary. They are somewhat as follows: There is in Adams county a community known as the Larian Community, composed of French people. They profess to own everything in common and the members of the community are under obligations to perform whatever duty may be assigned to them by the overseer of the colony, and the rearing of the children of each family is a part of the business of the entire community, (while in other respects the sacredness of the family is regarded as in other society or settlements.)

Some time during the latter portion of the year 1889 or early portion of 1891 Mr. Cruise, one of the members of the colony, was ordered out to work on some portion of the farm, while his wife was set to doing kitchen work. These parents being by reason of the colonial compact denied the right of, or at least ridged of the charge of their children, of course paid no attention to them; and while thus employed, a team known to be unsafe was left standing while some work was being done, and one of Mr. Cruise's children was allowed to play about the wagon. The team became scared and ran away, killing the child in its flight. Mr. Cruise now brings suit to recover of the community, in damages, the probable amount that the child could have earned during the years of his minority.

The case was heard before Judge Gregory, of the circuit court for Adams county, and went to the jury yesterday (June 12th), and after an absence of twelve or fifteen hours the jury agreed to disagree. The court ruled that the community was responsible, while they try to prove contributory negligence on the part of the parents. The evidence seemed to be confined to three propositions, to-wit: 1. In whose care was the child at the time of the accident? 2. Who was the negligent party? The case will be heard and determined at the next term.

STEAM MILLS VS. WATER MILLS.

In the early settlement of the west, one of the first enterprises which agitates the people is the erection of a flouring mill. And, as the country is new, and for it any of the actual settlers are able to go ahead, with their own means, and build a mill, it is rarely the case that an outside party, but little acquainted with the resources of the country, desires to risk all his means in an enterprise the result of which he has not the proper facilities to calculate. The people being anxious for the mill, they ask themselves if it would not be well to strike a medium between these two extremes, and they furnish, in money and labor, a part of the means necessary for the erection of the much needed mill. After deciding this in the affirmative, the dispute then arises as to which kind of a power is best suited for their locality; and there are always a score of old fogies ready to theorize on the subject, and without any experience whatever they urge their arguments and figures against the figures of experienced mill men, with as much tenacity as though it was a part of their actual knowledge; and by reason of this difference of opinion the object of it all is defeated. While as a matter of fact either kind, for all practical purposes, would be good enough, and for better than none at all.

I propose to state the facts regarding this question, only as gathered from an old mill man, Mr. Thomas George, of Corning, Iowa, who has had long experience in both kinds of mills, not only where water was scarce but where it was plenty, and the power good. In the first place he says that to run by water power you must build your mill not where you please, but where the power is, and in this case you are often at great expense in getting grain to the mill and the flour away from it.

2. Any water power is useless in times of high water, breaking away of dams, revolving wheel, repairing flumes and other accidents. In such times as those named the water power mill has to lay still a great length of time and at great expense, whereas with steam power the mill can be located at a place best suited and nearest to depots and elevators, and thus the great expense of handling of grain and flour be avoided.

Then with steam power the only trouble is in the natural wear and tear of machinery, which is common to both kinds of mills; and that at any time he can make steam from cold water sufficient to run with in fifteen minutes. That his experience has proven, that in the west, where water power is good, that with steam he can manufacture flour at least 25 cents per barrel less than with water; and in the west, where water powers are very unsafe, that a greater saving can be had with steam.

It seems to me that this subject is worthy of investigation, and the experience of mill men, if it is good for anything, should be given to the public.
